

06-22-2012 Ja-Deen drove us to Monschau, Germany today which is east just over the Belgium border. This town is just how you would expect a Germany town to look.

A view of the town below from the mountain side.

After a two hour drive it was time for a German lunch. The girls plus Grandson, Austin, order their lunch. Dave was in hog-heaven and ordered dark beer, sausage, mash potatoes and sauerkraut Oh so good!

There were so many photo opportunities that it was difficult to choose which ones to publish. The small stream that traversed through this quaint town, created some spectacular views.

Of course, for the girls, it was all about shopping.

So Austin and Grandpa had to find other ways of entertainment.

Austin next to a Christian Church.

Of course we all enjoyed the glass blowing demonstration. There were two artist making beautiful vases and other glass ornaments. They did a great job of describing the process if you spoke and understood German. We didn't have a clue.

We hated to leave this little town with all of its flowers and scenery.

But all good things what ever!
